

THE MODERN, INDEPENDENT WOMAN

Veronica Latimer

If feminism is solely designed to obtain equal rights for women in accordance with the rights of men then, of course, that is proper. But some types of feminism is out to achieve the superiority of women and, therefore, advance the inferiority of men and this is expressed unashamedly by many feminists. This attitude is also what is meant by the independent, modern woman. In other words, they do not want to depend on men as it diminishes them. They want to be self sufficient and have their own money. The concept of marriage may be anathema to them because they do not want to be committed to such a relationship and want to be free to do whatever they like. Some married women become feminists.

If such a woman has a husband, partner or lover she will resent his paying her bills because it makes her dependent on him and she also does not want to be committed to that man but, in effect, uses him. She will not accept that the man in her life loves her and wants to ensure that she does not go without and this love is protective and security. But that is his practical love which proves his devotion. Some women do not like this and although they may say that they are grateful, they hate this situation and yet, strangely, they will flirt and/or talk with any man they met in the store, on the sidewalk or on the streetcar. And she will love making her husband/partner jealous because it is ' getting one over on him ' and may prove the fickleness of her love for him.

Men that do so much for their wife or partner are not appreciated but their kindness is expected of them. Sex is also decided by the modern independent woman and if the man wants intimacy and she does not and he has his way, she can call rape and he can be prosecuted. If he fails to be intimate when she wants it, he is accused of not loving her. In this, and in many other things, it is a woman's world.

Many such women hate traditional values where a woman is happily married, loves her husband and their children and maintains a good home for her husband and family.

There is a growing injustice in the States, and elsewhere, where some women, who are married or in a relationship, go out to work to earn pin money whereas their husband/partner is earning a very fine wage and they have ample to live on. But the woman takes a job which a decent unemployed man, with a wife and family, can do which will make them secure. This independent woman is causing an injustice and feeding her greed and social status. Unemployment figures are very high and this is one reason why so many men are on the scrapheap and dependent on State benefits.

The more modern independent woman will not marry or live with a man as she does not want ties or to give the appearance of needing a man and requiring dependency. This introduces another female weakness which is pride. We all know the sayings of the serious problems of being proud in whichever gender.

Such women object to Christian and other religious teaching since they assert it makes man superior over the woman. As to the Christian faith, a husband is to love his wife, provide for her and protect her from all problems so that she may live a stress free life as far as possible. And in this, a wife should respect and honour her husband because he is worthy of this. We can see nothing wrong in this at all. It is moral and decent.

I was a feminist for some time but clearly saw that it does not work and it is unfair and often cruel to men. My husband endured my feminism for a while but I don't know how. I saw the inequality of the situation and the tough, unrelenting and bitchy women and how full of themselves they were and were moody and arrogant with it.

I saw how men could not see their children because of the unreasonable behaviour of their ex wife and her dictatorial attitude. I know of cases where a married couple were expecting a baby and the woman then had an abortion without considering her husband. It was also his child. Many children will grow up to eventually hate their mother and suffer psychologically because of an absent father.

In many marriages or relationships there is inequality and this is largely due to the dominance of women. They do not want to be tied or have to answer to a man. They do things which often go wrong and the man has to put it right and that makes them more unreasonable. It has been said that women are always right even when they are wrong and, being a woman and having been in the feminist movement, I can vouch for this.

There are women who make their men live a merry dance. The men pay the bills while the woman buys things including things that do not matter and go out and do not want their man to be with them.

I have seen women walk in front of their husband or partner which may indicate that he is second best!

In my days of the modern independent woman, I could be horrible and dismissive to my husband and seldom showed him any affection. I don't remember any time in my independent womanhood when I told him that I loved him and I was so inconsiderate and dismissive. Now I have his loving arms about me and I realise how much he means to me. It is wrong for women to rule.

Marriages and relationships break up because of things like this. There is no room for the independent, modern woman if she is dominant. Surely such dominance shows a lack of respect and love.
